

Recycling factory-AHA

Within the Erasmus project in Hanover they took us to a recycling factory called AHA. When we got there they divided us into groups, and each group had their own guide through the factory. She was mostly explaining how they recycle. When we came to one part of the factory they gave us a fluorescent vest for recognition and safety in the factory environment. Not far from the factory there were hills that were slightly green and the guide told us that they were made out of rubbish. When they gave us fluorescent vests they also gave us candy and pins with the factory logo. In the next room our guide took us to what was the place where you can see how the factory works, it is also a room for security camera surveillance. Then they took us to the meeting room. They let us look at and smell the garbage a couple of months old. The smell was really overwhelming. And that was the last room we saw inside the factory. When we came out of the factory they showed us some other things. They showed us old TVs, washing machines, and other old furniture. And that was the end of our trip to AHA. We returned their fluorescent vests and headed for the train.

Gabriela Dujic